The Effects of E-commerce on Local Labor Markets Job Market Paper
E-commerce has experienced extraordinary growth in recent years. This paper studies the effects of e-commerce on local labor markets resulting from the enactment of state legislation, the Amazon Tax, which reduced the price advantage of out-of-state e-commerce retailers. I find declines in employment (9.6%) and wages (7.8%) in last-mile transportation and warehousing, as well as declines in local retail employment and number of establishments (1%). I find distinctive effects by retail sector: warehouse clubs and supercenters' employment increases (6.27%), while other brick-and-mortar retailers' employment decreases (2.32%). These effects are influenced by retail employment changes in urban areas. Additionally, I observe a two-part compositional change of retail employment in non-urban areas: an increase in the share of office and service occupations (7.14% ) and decrease in the share of sales and related occupations (4.79%). Finally, through a general equilibrium model, I study the conditions that predict these empirical results.
